
Subject: IDL Licenses and architectures (was IDL LICENSING MADNESS)

Posted by offenbrg on Fri, 06 Aug 1993 14:00:17 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

[The original question deleted to save bandwidth]

thompson@serts.gsfc.nasa.gov (William Thompson) writes:

> I don't think this is true. The binary executable would have to be different, > but I think that the licenses can float between machines of different > architectures--even between VMS and Unix. This is what I've heard, but I don't > have any actual experience with it.

I think part of the problem is one of handshaking. VAX/VMS systems are very bad when it comes to communicating across networks with Unix machines. I don't know the details of how the license manager works, but I suspect that a VAX/VMS machine trying to communicate with a license daemon on a Unix box might not be able to get through, although it might work better going the other way.

Joel

--

Joel D. Offenbrg |
Hughes STX | I get paid to stare into space
Offenbrg@fondue.GSFC.NASA.Gov |
"I only know what I hear on Frank Zappa albums" - N.R.C
