
Subject: Re: IDL with multiple processors
Posted by korpela on Fri, 04 Dec 1998 08:00:00 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In article <748sgn$rcck$1@readme.uio.no>,
Stein Vidar Hagfors Haugan <steinhh@ulrik.uio.no> wrote:
>> It's also probably illegal to use fork on a machine with >> a floating license.
>
> Actually, I don't think RSI would mind from the licensing point of > view: AFAIK, they have a "one user, one screen, any number of processes" > policy (you can even run two IDL processes on separate machines, > but on the same display, using just one license).

I'm pretty sure that when using floating licences, every IDL process I start checks out 10 licences regardless of which display they are running on. It's only the static licenses that allow any number of processes to be started as long as they are running on the same machine (regardless of the display location).

Eric

--

Eric Korpela | An object at rest can never be korpela@ssl.berkeley.edu | stopped.
Click for home page.
