
Subject: Re: Win 95 question

Posted by promashkin on Fri, 14 Jul 2000 07:00:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Thanks Michael,

What you said is not too comforting. On my machine, a host of problems occurred one month after warranty expired :-(I am trying different killing fixes in the order of increasing damage now. The last resort - throw the CPU in the trash - is coming up, as now it won't stay up and running for more than 30 min. I think I know the thing to do: get new motherboard, CPU, memory, video card and better power supply, bigger hard drive and a new OS ...

Cheers,

Pavel

Michael W Asten wrote:

>

> Hi Pavel,

> No, I cant tell you why, but I had a similar problem 6 months ago with > drag and drop, altho I never worked out when/how it first occurred. I sent > my computer (Toshiba laptop 430CDT, Win95) back to the vendor for expert > help, and the best the vendor experts could do over 2 days (after trying > various reinstallations) was

> 1) ascertain from Microsoft that Microsoft had heard of the problem

> 2) advice from Microsoft that they could not offer either explanation or > fix

> 3) reimage the disc, ie. do a total low-level disc reformat and > reinstallation of everything.

>

> That does not answer your question , but be assured that , unlike Bill

> Gates, I sympathize.

>

> Regards,

> Michael Asten ħ½
