I'd suggest to capture the window, save the screen shot as GIF file, replace colors with your favorite MS image editor and place that figure in the manual for your software (that you are writing, too, as you go, right? :-)
Then, because nothing can be done about base colors that would be cross-platform, leave the code as it is. But say to the user that in their discounted version colored bases are not implemented, and to get colored bases that they see in the manual will cost them extra.
This is a "win-win" situation: they believe you are so good that the bases are colored, but they will never pay extra just to find out how you did that. You will be safe :-) Cheers,
