Subject: Re: Xmanager/multitasking windows
Posted by crdmi on Thu, 14 Jul 1994 21:13:59 GMT

In article <300s5mINN7qp@i32.sma.ch>, stl@sma.ch (Stephen Strebel) writes:
> Hi all,
>
> well I promised earlier to give an example of how you can make windows > run two programs at once (sequential event starting two different > functions/routines).
>
> If anyone, thinks I am wrong, I would LOVE to see your solution.

I haven't tried this but how about this:

Instead of writing the routine to do your entire computation, write a routine that does a small piece of it. When you recieve an event triggering the computation, set up a TIMER event. Each time the timer event happens you do a little more of the computation, and set a new timer event, until the computation is done.

--
Daniel M. Israel
<crdmi@vulcan.giss.nasa.gov>
Goddard Institute of Space Studies
2880 Broadway, New York, NY