Dear Craig,

I do not very often search by the google search or your archive. I normally spent a few minutes per day reading this newsgroup articles and sometimes

I am able to help someone. The most interesting things I have stored to a local mail folder. The oldest one is from David Fanning followed by Phil Williams in 1996. In the past and till now I have stored these mails myself because I am not sure if deja or google will stay alive all the time I plan working with idl.

Someone else who is not regulary reading this famous newsgroup or an idl beginners needs each help he or she can get. If someone has a problem he or she can search a big library of questions and answers and I believe a lot of people are interested in reading archives.

As David did preparing requests into tips is very useful for all of us.

This is the right way to organize an archive but it takes a lot of time.
And this is the answer of your question too.

I will not demand that's you have to organize your archive in this way until I am myself are able to do the same.

best wishes

Reimar
