"Pavel A. Romashkin" wrote:

>
> ...We know it is all Apple's fault. If > they want people to use their computers, they better finance development > of software for them. ...

On that front, I have two corrections and one addition:

Correction 1) From earlier, I relayed that RSI sales were down 50% from 1999-2000. That was incorrect. _Mac_ sales at RSI have been down 50% each year for the past _3_ years.

Correction 2) I relayed Apple gave RSI a G4 to help their Mac effort. That was incorrect. Apple gave several machines and good general hardware support. RSI, however needed/needs other types of support as well - critical things like documentation help, engineering resource support, etc.

My additional news is on that front. RSI and Apple have been communicating (yesterday) with positive results that are now being evaluated by RSI. Look for an announcement maybe late next week.

A new statement from Mike Scally (CEO) should be on the web sometime today addressing allot of this.

Noam