
Subject: Re: Message From RSI VP of Engineering
Posted by Noam R. Izenberg on Wed, 17 Oct 2001 10:53:44 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Liam Gumley wrote:

>
> Any comment from the community on whether this suggestion would meet the > needs of Mac OS X users? (That is, an OS X version of IDL that uses > X-Windows for direct/object graphics and user interface). Granted, you don't > get the fancy Aqua user interface, but do IDL programmers really care, as > long IDL is running on their Mac? For cross-platform development purposes, I > would think a more UNIX-like version for the Mac would be a good thing.

Speaking form myself, that's all I need. As long as it can take advantage of the CPU, I don't need or necessarily want the candy coating. If RSI can do this, IMO there is/will be no problem with the mac platform and It's future support.

Noam
