Folks,

At the last meeting of the IDL Expert Programmer's Association Executive Committee there was an item of New Business that needs your attention. (Those of you who have been following along will realize this is the first order of new business in over a decade. Most of the time the Old Business inspires such a ruckus that the police throw us out before we even get to the topic. I attribute the relatively restrained tone of the last meeting to the graying of our members and their continued reluctance to admit younger (and--let's admit it--brighter) members, but that's another story.)

Anyway, after numerous threats (and even more drunken counter-threats) the following resolution was placed on the record for a vote of the members. To wit:

Be it resolved that the name of the IDL Expert Programmer's Association be changed to the IDL Expert Body Over All Scientific and Technical Spheres, or IDLEBOASTS.

Voting will end at close of business Friday. The victors will be holding a victory celebration starting at 5PM at the usual location. (If past voting irregularities are any indication, you have a better chance of having your vote counted if you vote early rather than later.)

Cheers,

David
