Randall Skelton <rhskelto@atm.ox.ac.uk> writes:

> On Wed, 10 Jul 2002, Neil Talsania <neil.talsania@kodak.com> wrote:
>   ^^^^^^^^^
>
> Surely this is not for real. I would have thought that a _Kodak_ employee > could have directly called the to the RSI CEO for support =)
>
>>   I am giving a demo of an IDL application to a customer next week. I would >> like to package up my IDL code into something that I can launch from either >> the start menu or an icon. This is still going to be running on my machine, >> so licenses are not an issue. Also, I would like it if the IDL development >> window was not present (as an icon would be OK). I think that this would >> make for a nicer demo, then having to bring up IDL to start then run my >> code.
>
> Kidding aside, see: http://www.dfanning.com/tips/idl_icon.html
>
>> One other complication is that in order for my code to work I need to >> restore envi in batch mode so that I have access to some of their functions.
>
> Sorry, you are on your own with envi...

Heh, and the irony is that Kodak is the company that was menacingly threatening legal action against me for my SAVE library, for the very reason that they were worried about the security of ENVI code from prying eyes.

Craig

--
 --- --------------
Craig B. Markwardt, Ph.D.   EMAIL: craigmnet@cow.physics.wisc.edu
Astrophysics, IDL, Finance, Derivatives | Remove "net" for better response
 --- --------------