
Subject: Re: xroi window too large
Posted by JD Smith on Fri, 17 Oct 2003 22:24:57 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Fri, 17 Oct 2003 13:26:17 -0700, David Fanning wrote:

> Stephen Johnson writes:

>

>> I'm an IDL novice, so the first thing I did was tab after xroi in emacs >> to find the x/y_scroll_size option and tried them out. This solves one >> problem (the window was too big) but it doesn't do what I really want
>> -- which I didn't make sufficiently clear in my original posting.

>>

>> I wish that xroi showed a scaled version of my image, not just the >> image at maximum size with scroll bars set so it fits on my screen. The >> issue is that I want my users to be able to see the entire (scaled) >> image on screen and make a simple ROI cut. It's possible they could >> muddle through it with the scroll_size option set small enough, but it >> would be nicer if they could see the entire image.

>

> Well, there are always people standing by to build you whatever you > need, for a small price. :-)

I'm was just pleased to see an IDL novice thinking "hit tab after a command" in Emacs is part of the standard IDL programming workflow. It certainly is for me.

JD
