
Subject: Re: How to make IDL be quiet
Posted by dcw_yip on Thu, 18 Dec 2003 19:37:11 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Mike:

I'm there with you man. I feel your pain. But there is light at the end of my tunnel. I wake up everyday and check off one more day until we switch the project over to C++ and into the 21st century.

David

Michael Wallace <mwallace.removethismunge@swri.edu.invalid> wrote in message news:<vu1dtmcgncq86@corp.supernews.com>...

> Tell me about it! Isn't it enough to cope with just the language in > general?! I'm a software developer and the past several years I've been > mainly working with Java, a little C/C++, and a couple other languages.
> I've started learning IDL since that's the language of choice of the > physicists I work with and I need to start incorporating the advanced > plotting capabilities into my other software. It was a little culture > shock laying eyes on IDL for the first time -- so-called 'objects' and > pointers just made me grimace. But, I'm slowly learning how to cope. ;-)
>
> Mike W
