Subject: Re: XML parser question: How to use a schema?
Posted by Karl Schultz on Fri, 07 May 2004 19:48:20 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

"picard" <jeanluc_picard_66@hotmail.com> wrote in message news:8ff79ce0.0405071003.4831bedf@posting.google.com...
> I have been reading the manual that contains a section on "Using the > XML Parser Object Class."
>
> In particular the manual mentions: "The structure of data > stored in an XML file is described by either a Document Type > Definition (DTD) or an XML schema, which can either be included in the > file itself or referenced from an external network location."
>
> The examples included in the chapter explicitly define the structure.
>
> Does anybody have an example in which a schema is used?

This is a pretty large subject that is discussed extensively elsewhere, so it is best to point you to something like:

http://www.w3schools.com/xml/default.asp or any of the other many web sites that cover XML.

At the above link, the section called "XML Validation" discusses schemas and gives examples.

Karl