In article <10e8o4b71tcdn5a@corp.supernews.com>,
Michael Wallace <mwallace.no.spam@no.spam.swri.edu.invalid> wrote:
>
> Also, I'm trying to figure out another licensing issue that RSI hasn't > made clear. If I create a new IDL session, I will use one of our > floating licenses. Now, if I start up a second IDL session with the > same username on the same computer, do I chew up another license? When > I talked with RSI last, my contact indicated that another license would > get used. However, when I look at the results from lmstat -a, I only > see one entry for my computer/username no matter how many IDL sessions I > start. So, am I really chewing up extra licenses and lmstat -a doesn't > show all the computer/username duplicates, or am I really just using one > license?
>

I'm pretty sure you only use one license per username/computer as long as they're also on the same display (in the case of Unix versions and X-windows) as well.

--Mike

--
Michael Chinander
m-chinander@uchicago.edu
Department of Radiology
University of Chicago