How do I disable tracebacks associated with the message procedure?

Before the programming gurus yell at me for potentially hiding bugs my code, let me explain why I want to do this. I have a library of procedures and in certain cases I am creating my own errors via message which are several calls down in the stack. When the error comes out, there is a long traceback, but I only want the end user to see the message itself and not the entire traceback since the traceback is going several layers down into code that the end user shouldn't even be aware of. I do want the user to see the error, but not all the files and line numbers.
