Subject: Re: Installing IDL 6.1 on debian linux
Posted by Mathieu Malaterre on Wed, 27 Jul 2005 17:36:42 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Mathieu Malaterre wrote:
> Vincent Noel wrote:
>
>> Hey Mathieu,
>>
>> Mathieu Malaterre wrote:
>>
>>> The license indeed contains a 'DAEMON' line, but again I need to modify >>> the hardcoded path to point to the proper path. Could someone from rsync >>> confirm this is ok (one can change the default /usr/local to /opt with >>> no consequence).
>>
>>
>> If you ever modify the content of the license file, it will invalidate >> it, and the license manager won't be happy. You should never change the >> content of a license file, when you need a new one you should ask a new >> one from RSI (is that who you meant by 'rsync' ?)
>
>
> Oops the web site is rsinc, but my subconscient made me write rsync the > well known transfer protocol :)
>
>> For your particular case, I would think the correct paths are set up in >> the license files during the installation process. I would guess that >> something went wrong during your installation. It might be a lot easier >> to just re-install the thing... (maybe even using the "suggested" paths >> to simplify the whole thing ;)) >> IIRC, the installation is a little confusing - you have to untar the >> IDL archive directly in the final installation directory, and launch
>> ./install from it, which is very unusual.
>
>
> hum I see. I'll try again later.

Well I tried again multiple times cannot get passed this damned license thing. I switched to a win32 box and after a few tries I got it working...

Mathieu