Subject: Re: Mac Program Support Posted by K. Bowman on Fri, 26 Aug 2005 14:00:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In article <MPG.1d781dcfcc165945989a5b@news.frii.com>, David Fanning <davidf@dfanning.com> wrote:

- > Here is another thing today that surprised me. Two people
- > in the class have new Mac laptops. I have a little program,
- > PickColorName, that displays 96 small draw widgets and fills
- > them with a color with Polyfill. Colors appears instantaneously
- > on a Windows PC. But on the Macs (both of them) the draw widgets
- > appear all in black, then a second or so later the colors appear.
- > It is VERY slow.

I tried it on my desktop and my laptop. It pops up instantly on my desktop. I can see it draw the boxes on my laptop, but I wouldn't call it slow. It's hard to say where in the graphics pipeline the bottleneck might be. It's not the graphics chip per se, because I can render 3-D surfaces on my laptop in IDL and rotate them in real time with the mouse with essentially instantaneous response.

Ken Bowman