The text on the main page looks fine to me.  The primary font on the other pages does seem to be small, but I can still read it.  I agree with JD that it does seem to be much smaller than other sites.  Might I suggest using relative font sizes in your style sheet?

Instead of something like this,
font-size: 9pt

Use this instead,
font-size: small

That should alleviate the problems due to resolution differences and how folks have fonts defined in their browsers.

-Mike

P.S.  My first post to the IDL newsgroup in a while and it's about CSS.
  Heh.

David Fanning wrote: >  JD Smith writes:
>
>
>> The default font size is very small, bordering on unreadable for me. I do >> have a high pixel pitch, but it's much smaller than other sites.
>
>
>  Say what!? What browser is that? My biggest problem up >  to now is that the damn fonts are too big! Sigh..
>
>  I may have to stick with the day job and get out of web >  development altogether. :-(
>
>  Cheers,
>
>  David
>