Thanks David,
   In case anyone has a similar issue unresolved, it appears when I put an & character in front of the end* statements that it compiles as expected. So it looks like your guess is pretty reasonable.
Mike

David Fanning wrote:
> Michael Farrey writes:
>
>> We just installed PV-WAVE 8.0 on a Windows XP box. When I try to run >> existing scripts that work on Unix, syntax errors come up for any END >> statement of ENDIF, ENDELSE, etc.
>>
>> Even from the command line when I do a "wave help" command, their help >> script pops up syntax errors for any END* derivative. Since the PV-WAVE >> script errors out along with ones we made, that leads me to think it's >> something we did during install...any clues?
>>
>> I'm pretty green wrt PV-WAVE so this is likely a quick solution, thanks >> in advance.
>
> I'm going to guess that whatever method you used to transfer > your .pro files from your UNIX machine to your Windows machine > didn't adequately take into account the differences in > end-of-line characters. I suspect you have run-on lines that > are causing you all the problems.
>
> Cheers,
>
> David
> --
> David Fanning, Ph.D.
> Fanning Software Consulting, Inc.
> Coyote's Guide to IDL Programming: http://www.dfanning.com/