
Subject: Re: personal license problem

Posted by Kenneth Bowman on Fri, 02 Mar 2007 17:14:35 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In article <MPG.2052041193a1558e989ea8@news.frii.com>,
David Fanning <news@dfanning.com> wrote:

ITT called me earlier this week to ask permission to link to my IDL web site (which I thought was courteous of them).

We discussed the "Related Sites ..." page, and my first comment was, "David's site isn't on here!" I was assured that they were talking with you and left it at that.

I raised another issue that I think is important for the IDL community. They have set up IDL and ENVI forums accessible through their web site

<http://www.ittvis.com/forum/choosecategory.asp>

In my view this leads to the creation of two separate user communities, one that uses this group, and one that uses their forums.

I am wondering whether there might be a technical solution to this, or whether we need to think about moving this discussion to their web site, and whether they would feel obligated to moderate (censor) postings in their forum, among other things.

Perhaps we need to keep a free and independent channel, but I don't really want to spend the time going through two different user forums.

Any thoughts?

Ken Bowman
