In article <MPG.21a5367149f8346298a0eb@news.frii.com>, David Fanning <news@dfanning.com> wrote:

> Well, I have been thinking about this today. Mike is absolutely > right, ITTVIS is not thinking of current license holders (and > they claim they have 150K "seats" of IDL out there and another > 25K "seats" of ENVI). They are thinking about who they might be > able to sell IDL to in the future.

I guess this means that we will never get a Postscript device that full supports 24-bit color. ;-(

> And, anyway, I'm thinking its time > to look for a small village in South America where I can > practice my Spanish and go fishing. There's irony for you, > an IDL programmer who is thinking of getting away from > programming. :-)

Just wait until you get that new Mac. It will make IDL programming FUN again and you can always do your programming on that South American beach!

Ken