
Subject: Re: IDL 7.0 Projects

Posted by [Paul Van Delst\[1\]](#) on Wed, 05 Dec 2007 23:34:26 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

David Fanning wrote:

<snip>

> Does this seem like a workable configuration to anyone?

Not really, no. I have to potentially alter my working copy directory structure (which is basically a mirror of my repository organised in a way that is logical to me) so the IDL workbench works as expected? Isn't it meant to work the other way? This sort of approach to adaptability (i.e. people adapt to software, rather than the vice versa) seems a bit 20th century to me. I decide what constitutes a "project", or "subproject", or "nested subproject"...etc.. as required by my needs, not the software.

Or, should I lay awake for the day my stovetop tells me how it's going to cook my food for me when I wonder aloud in front of it "where are the controls for the burners?" Will it gasp in horror and refuse to cook my steak when I request it well-done? :o) p.s. still waiting for a 7.0 install.....

cheers,

paulv
