On Dec 5, 12:16 pm, "R.G. Stockwell" <noem...@please.com> wrote:
> I have my idl code on a networked raided backedup drive,
> but often take my laptop away from that network.
>
> So I have my path setup to look for the network first (drive H say) > then look on the laptop (drive C). It works pretty well.
>
> If I put my 'workspace' on H, and am off the network,
> I get 'workspace cannot be found' errors and it forces > me to create a new one.
>
> Anyone have a good solution to using travelling workspaces?
> I haven't really looked into the problem much yet, maybe it's > a stupid question with an obvious answer.
>
> Cheers, > bob

Can you just create your workspace on the C-drive, but create projects from your remote (H) drive. The workspace won't copy the files from the H-drive, but just keep a reference to them.