Subject: Re: Custom formatting under version 7.0?
Posted by Michael Galloy on Thu, 06 Dec 2007 18:38:39 GMT

On Dec 6, 9:54 am, "Jim Pendleton, ITT Visual Information Solutions" <jimp@no_spam.ittvis.com> wrote:
> To follow up on Doug's comment, creating templates for IDLdoc-style > comments also helps discourage laziness in documenting one's code.
> Now if only I could attach keyboard accelerators to individual template > insertion commands...

I've created some templates for writing classes/subclass (getProperty, setProperty, cleanup, init, and __define, plus comment headers). Very handy. My one issue is that it indents every line, so I have to select all and move left. I don't see a way to fix that (and ITT VIS's function and procedure templates do it too).

Mike
--
www.michaelgalloy.com
Tech-X Corporation
Software Developer II