
Subject: Re: Source code management with IDL Workbench
Posted by David Fanning on Thu, 13 Dec 2007 21:23:32 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Mike Galloy writes:

> In my experience, every way of adding files to a repository requires > checking out the repository first. The Subversion book says about "svn > add":
>
> "Add files, directories, or symbolic links to your working copy and > schedule them for addition to the repository. They will be uploaded > and added to the repository on your next commit. If you add something > and change your mind before committing, you can unschedule the > addition using svn revert."
>
> So I think that means you have to have a working copy first.
>
> But, why would you do that? Don't you need to have a local copy of > everything working, test it, etc. AND then check in the file? I > suppose if you had a library of completely unrelated routines then > adding them directly would make sense.

Alright, you are totally confusing me. :-)

I have set up a Subversion repository. And I have IDL programs, sitting right here in a directory on my C drive that I want to add to the repository. How do I do that from within IDL?

Cheers,

David

--

David Fanning, Ph.D.
Fanning Software Consulting, Inc.
Coyote's Guide to IDL Programming: <http://www.dfanning.com/>
Sepore ma de ni thui. ("Perhaps thou speakest truth.")
