On Mar 7, 12:15 pm, David Fanning <n...@dfanning.com> wrote:
> Folks,
>
> I presume I'm the last to hear about this, but I learned > about an X server that runs on Windows the other day, > named Xming:
>
>   http://sourceforge.net/projects/xming
>
> It is very nice, and it's free. :-)
>
> After installing it on my Windows machine, I can log > into my LINUX box at work from home and see my calendar, > e-mail, EMACS, and even the IDL Workbench! Wow. Who knew!?
>
> It works great, except that the darn thing cannot > display any kind of object graphics window. This is > a HUGE disappointment, naturally, as I can't use my > iTools. ;-)
>
> Is this an IDL problem, do you think, or an X server > problem? Would I have to do some kind of tweak to get > this to work? Any info is helpful.
>
> Cheers,
>
> David
> --
> David Fanning, Ph.D.
> Fanning Software Consulting, Inc.
> Coyote's Guide to IDL Programming:http://www.dfanning.com/
> Sepore ma de ni thui. ("Perhaps thou speakest truth.")

Hi,
It seems like a Xserver problem, because I used X-win32 doing same stuff and no problem appeared, when I turned to Xming I had same problem.
I hope this can help you.

By the way, thank you for your book <IDL Programming Techniques>, I'm a new user of IDL and it helps me a lot!

--
Ding