Subject: Re: how to suppres warning
Posted by MC on Fri, 24 Oct 2008 01:13:53 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Read the entire line and process it as a string using the same format that generated it... At least thats how it was done in the dark ages...

Cheers

On Oct 23, 9:36 pm, Ingo von Borstel <newsgro...@planetmaker.de> wrote:
> Hi,
>
>> is your problem that you get megabytes of warning texts, but execution >> continues?
>
> The only error which I get is a type conversion error - which has no > influence whatsoever and the programme happily continues to run.
>
>> you do not care that some part of your data was not read correctly?
>
> Exactly. I'm reading a data files with different number of columns which > as the first and last part of each line contains a textual comment - > which of course fails to convert to a numerical value.
>
>> If it is the former, maybe it is better to suffer the warnings than to >> waste effort in suppressing them.
>
> Well, yes, I _can_ live with them. As it seems that it's not as easy > (just changing a switch or compile option yet unknown to me), that's > what it will be. I know it's not overtly complicated to get rid of them, > but I would need to customize the read-in procedure (it can deal with > leading, but not trailing text) which I wanted to avoid in order to > avoid code duplication.
>
> Thanks for your advice :)
>
> Ingo
>
> --
> Ingo von Borstel   <newsgro...@planetmaker.de>
> Public Key:http://www.planetmaker.de/ingo.asc
>
> If you need an urgent reply, replace newsgroups by vgap.