
Subject: Re: SkippySky : New Astronomy weather forecast website
Posted by Andrew Cool on Tue, 23 Dec 2008 11:41:22 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Dec 23, 1:27 am, chrism <chris...@gmail.com> wrote:
> On Dec 22, 3:11 am, Andrew Cool <andrew.c...@dsto.defence.gov.au> > wrote:
>
>> Hello All,
>
>> On the assumption that this Group has the odd astronomer or two on >> board, >> here's a bit of shameless promotion for an IDL application produced by >> Robert Dahni of Metvis Services and myself.
>
>> SkippySky takes GFS data from the NOAA NCEP computer model and >> presents it in familiar weather map format. Many existing astronomy >> weather forecast sites use the same data, but present information for >> only 1 specified lat/lon point at a time.
>
> Any chance you can add South America to the list?
>
> Chris Miller (CTIO)

Hi Chris,

Maybe not South America, but if you go to www.skippysky.com.au now, you will see Cerro Tololo and a full set of data.

Gotta be pleased with that!

Andrew

andrew_at_cool.id.au
