
Subject: Re: IDLDOC 3.2 Index page not as interesting as it could be...

Posted by Michael Galloy on Mon, 15 Jun 2009 23:04:18 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Gianguido Cianci wrote:

> Not sure how many of you use IDLDOC to document your code. I like it a > lot.

>

> I have noticed that when I run it, if I got to the 'Overview' I see a > list of directories where my code is stored. If I click on one of > those directories I see a list of procedures, with the 1st sentence of > the description underneath each one.

>

> Something like:

>

> arraypad.pro

>

> Pads arrays on each side with zeros or a user supplied > value.

>

>

> However, when I go to the "Index" section, I get mu less interesting > info:

>

> arraypad

> routine in arraypad.pro

> arraypad.pro

> .pro file in ./ directory

>

> Is there a way to get the "Index" section to also display the 1st > sentence of the documentation?

> Wouldn't it be more interesting to have this first sentence appear > under the procedures in the "categories" page? Am I missing > something?

No, there isn't a way to do this currently, but this is a good idea.
I've created a feature request for this in IDLdoc 3.3:

<http://idldoc.idldev.com/ticket/53>

Mike

--

www.michaelgalloy.com

Associate Research Scientist

Tech-X Corporation
