Subject: Re: yet another 2d matching question
Posted by Gray on Fri, 30 Jul 2010 15:25:15 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Jul 30, 11:23 am, Gray <grayliketheco...@gmail.com> wrote:
> On Jul 30, 11:15 am, Paolo <pgri...@gmail.com> wrote:
>
>
>
>
>
>> On Jul 30, 10:01 am, Gray <grayliketheco...@gmail.com> wrote:
>
>>> Hi all,
>
>>> For quite a while I've been using JD Smith's match_2d routine to match >>> xy coords between lists. However, this and all the other matching >>> codes I've seen out there suffer from a variation of the uniqueness of >>> matches problem.
>
>>> Codes like SRCOR in the NASA IDL library let you specify a one-to-one >>> match, i.e. enforcing that each element in list 2 only be matched to >>> one element in list 1; using match_2d's match_distance keyword one >>> could implement the same effect oneself. However, while that excludes >>> multiple matches to the same element, it's all done after the fact,
>>> after the original match was determined.
>
>>> What I'm looking for is an algorithm that matches 2 lists, identifies >>> multiple-matches, and then looks for additional matches within the >>> search radius for elements which would become unmatched after >>> enforcing a one-to-one relationship. What I mean is, say element 0 in >>> list 2 is matched to both element 3 and element 5 in list 1, and that >>> the distance between 2_0 and 1_3 is smaller than the distance between >>> 2_0 and 1_5. In that case, 1_5 would become unmatched; but what if >>> there is element 2_1 which is also within the search radius of 1_5?
>>> Then, 1_5 should be re-matched with 2_1.
>
>>> My best idea thus far is to run match_2d once, identify multiple>>> matches, keep the matches with minimum distance using match_distance, >>> then iterate with the remaining elements until match_2d returns no >>> matches. Can anyone come up with a better solution?
>
>> Hmmm... what about starting with first point (a) in list 1, finding >> the nearest >> point (b) to (a) in list 2, removing (b) from list 2 and repeat for >> all points >> in list 1? [this assumes list 1 and list 2 have the same number of >> elements N, >> which is a necessary condition for a one-to-one matching].

>
>> With some smart partitioning of list 1 it will take ~log(N) to find
>> the nearest
>> point, so we are looking at ~ N log(N) operations...
>
>> Ciao,
>> Paolo
>
>>> --Gray
>
> I'm fine with having there be points which don't match at all w/in the > search radius, I'm just looking to force any matches that exist to be > recognized.
>
> The straight FOR-loop method is certainly serviceable, but I had hoped > there was a more efficient way to do it... but it's certainly possible > (or even likely) that anything fancier I try to do is LESS efficient.
>
> --Gray

Though I have trouble believing that FOR is the way to go when I have ~50k elements in each list.
