
Subject: Re: How 2 access to ubuntu in my office
Posted by d.poreh on Sat, 17 Dec 2011 08:01:45 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Dec 13, 10:32 am, DavePoreh <d.po...@gmail.com> wrote:

> On Dec 13, 2:35 am, Nigel Wade <nwm-n...@ion.le.ac.uk> wrote:

>

>

>

>

>

>

>

>

>

>> On 12/12/11 09:48, DavePoreh wrote:

>

>>> On Dec 11, 10:06 pm, Matt Francis<mattjamesfran...@gmail.com> wrote:

>>>> If you don't need an X display then PuTTY

(<http://www.chiark.greenend.org.uk/~sgtatham/putty/>) is a free and relatively >>>> easy to use option for Windows. From memory Ubuntu I think >>>> installations by default don't have an ssh server installed. This is a >>>> help page for a slightly older Ubuntu install than the most up to >>>> date, but it should all still be correct <https://help.ubuntu.com/10.04/serverguide/C/openssh-server.html>

>

>>>> There may be some trickiness getting into your office machine though, >>>> depending on what security is in place at your workplace.

>

>>> thanks Matt. Putty is working just fine.

>>> Cheers,

>>> Dave

>

>> If you want to see graphical output, e.g. from IDL, then you will need >> an X server. We use NX here (which would be free for you to install on >> your home system), and vastly preferable to non-optimized X servers such >> as eXceed due to the inbuilt compression of the X protocol which NX >> provides.

>

>> However, I would not recommend using the full desktop over a home >> network connection. I don't know Ubuntu so don't know what alternative >> desktops it provides. We use openSUSE, and most users prefer the >> reasonably lightweight XFCE desktop for remote sessions.

>

> Thanks. i tried NX but when i put my IP (destination) it shows me > connection error. lets see what is wrong.

> Cheers,

> Dave

when i am trying to connect with NX it gives me some error. do you think that i need to set st in my office ubuntu or not?

Cheers,
Dave
