
Subject: Re: How 2 access to ubuntu in my office
Posted by penteado on Sat, 17 Dec 2011 17:48:07 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Dec 17, 6:01 am, DavePoreh <d.po...@gmail.com> wrote:
> On Dec 13, 10:32 am, DavePoreh <d.po...@gmail.com> wrote:
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>> On Dec 13, 2:35 am, Nigel Wade <nmw-n...@ion.le.ac.uk> wrote:
>
>>> On 12/12/11 09:48, DavePoreh wrote:
>
>>>> On Dec 11, 10:06 pm, Matt Francis<mattjamesfran...@gmail.com> wrote:
>>>> > If you don't need an X display then PuTTY >>>> (<http://www.chiark.greenend.org.uk/~sgtatham/putty/>) is a free and relatively >>>> > easy to use option for Windows. From memory Ubuntu I think >>>> > installations by default don't have an ssh server installed. This is a >>>> > help page for a slightly older Ubuntu install than the most up to >>>> > date, but it should all still be >>>> correcthttps://help.ubuntu.com/10.04/serverguide/C/openssh-s erver.html
>
>>>> > There may be some trickiness getting into your office machine though, >>>> > depending on what security is in place at your workplace.
>
>>>> thanks Matt. Putty is working just fine.
>>>> Cheers,
>>>> Dave
>
>>> If you want to see graphical output, e.g. from IDL, then you will need >>> an X server. We use NX here (which would be free for you to install on >>> your home system), and vastly preferable to non-optimized X servers such >>> as eXceed due to the inbuilt compression of the X protocol which NX >>> provides.
>
>>> However, I would not recommend using the full desktop over a home >>> network connection. I don't know Ubuntu so don't know what alternative >>> desktops it provides. We use openSUSE, and most users prefer the >>> reasonably lightweight XFCE desktop for remote sessions.
>
>> Thanks. i tried NX but when i put my IP (destination) it shows me >> connection error. lets see what is wrong.

>> Cheers,
>> Dave
>
> when i am trying to connect with NX it gives me some error. do you > think that i need to set st in my office ubuntu or not?
> Cheers,
> Dave

The nx server has to be running on the computer you want to access.
