
Subject: Re: IDLdoc: Embedded HTML code
Posted by Yngvar Larsen on Fri, 05 Oct 2012 14:05:19 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Tuesday, 2 October 2012 19:32:49 UTC+2, Mike Galloy wrote:

> On 10/2/12 10:51 AM, Yngvar Larsen wrote:

>

>> A useful feature of IDLdoc when MARKUP_STYLE='verbatim', is that you may embed small snippets of HTML code directly in the text and it will show up correctly in the generated HTML output. For instance a small table. (Maybe this is considered cheating, and not really intended functionality ?) However, when using MARKUP_STYLE='rst', this trick does not work anymore. There are embedding options for graphics and links, but I cannot find anything about embedding HTML code.

> Yes, you are right the rst style does not allow HTML embedding, but the > other styles (IDL, IDLdoc, and verbatim) do.

>

> One workaround right now would be to use a separate docformat statement > for that single file, though that is not very satisfactory for the rest > of the comments.

Yes, that is my problem here.

>

>

>

> Adding the html directive (and maybe latex as well) as a feature > request. They will only show up when using that output type.

Another possibility is support for some simple markup like textile (<http://textile.thresholdstate.com>) and/or the Wiki formatting system used by trac.

--

Yngvar
