Further examination of this seems to suggest that the Y scale is in fact contained in the returned variable "scales", however, this is an assumption as the frequency components it finds in the test signal are now closer to where they should be but still not at the exact spot. I find no documentation that would evidence that this is what it is... wavelets with IDL, the great unknown...?