Subject: Re: SPAWN background command without nohup?
Posted by Matthew Argall on Mon, 30 Jun 2014 12:40:58 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

If you use SETENV to create an environment variable, it would at least give you access to the PIDs after IDL exits. If you could then monitor IDL to know when it exits, you could kill any remaining processes.