Subject: Re: processing keyboard events in X Posted by Aviv Gladman on Tue, 12 Aug 1997 07:00:00 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ah yes, the "if we can't have it, no-one can" lowest common denominator theory of software design that makes Microsoft what it is today. I hope the "list" also includes elimination of the annoying (IMO, of course) comma that is used to separate elements in a matrix.

Aviv S. Gladman

On Mon, 11 Aug 1997, David Fanning wrote:

- > [snip]
- > One person's "ridiculous limitation" is often another person's
- > "next to impossible task". This often asked for, but never seen
- > (yet), capability is apparently extremely difficult to make work
- > across the multiple platforms RSI supports. RSI tries (rightly,
- > I think) not to be too aggressive at introducing features into
- > IDL that work on one platform, but not on others.
- >
- > I hear that this is "on the list" of things that they hope to
- > do in the future.
- } [snip]