
Subject: Re: processing keyboard events in X
Posted by Aviv Gladman on Tue, 12 Aug 1997 07:00:00 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ah yes, the "if we can't have it, no-one can" lowest common denominator theory of software design that makes Microsoft what it is today. I hope the "list" also includes elimination of the annoying (IMO, of course) comma that is used to separate elements in a matrix.

Aviv S. Gladman

On Mon, 11 Aug 1997, David Fanning wrote:

> [snip]
> One person's "ridiculous limitation" is often another person's
> "next to impossible task". This often asked for, but never seen > (yet), capability is apparently extremely difficult to make work > across the multiple platforms RSI supports. RSI tries (rightly, > I think) not to be too aggressive at introducing features into > IDL that work on one platform, but not on others.
>
> I hear that this is "on the list" of things that they hope to > do in the future.
> } [snip]
