
Subject: Re: Running PVWAVE on a different OS
Posted by Jo Klein on Tue, 05 Sep 2006 13:18:02 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi Frank,

This sounds like a vnc rather than an IDL problem. Try starting your vncserver with explicit options for colour, such as -depth 24

Also, try and display a true-colour image using XV or something like that on your visual, if vnc's the culprit, you will see patches of colour where there should be smooth transitions.

Cheers,

Jo

Frank Drost wrote:

> Hi,
> I have just moved to another company. I still need to access my data > and pvwave programs at my previous position, which I do through vpnc. I > run linux on a Intel86 24 bits.
> When I run pvwave at the remote computer, I do not get the colours > right. The easiest example of what I mean is that when I typ "palette" > at the pvwave prompt, the palette window opens but all colours are a > shade of blue (going from black to darkblue). And although I can change > the position of the colourrange on the 3 scrollbars, the colours are > not updated. When I load an existing colourscheme, I don't get any > error messages, but the colours have not changed at all. My settings > for the computer I used at my previous position were for a dec-alpha.
> So my guess is that I have to get different settings. Does anyone have > an idea?
>
> Thanks
>