What I liked about it:

1. Weight feels good, and gun handles comfortably.
2. Unusually durable paint and wear plates.
3. Case included with allen wrenches, oil and connector.
4. Price. I managed to get this gun on sale at amazon for about $182.

What I did not like:

1. Made in Taiwan! I would never have bought it had I known this ahead of time. All my other Sencos were made in USA.
2. Depth of drive adjustment doesn't work very well.
3. Bends nail heads somewhat frequently (about once every 10-15 nails).
4. Double and triple fires occasionally about once every 30 nails.

My conclusion:

I'm not a pro, but if I was I would definitely steer clear of this gun. I have no illusions that it is better made than a Hitachi, Max or Bostich. However, it was significantly cheaper at the time I purchased it. It did it's job OK, but boy would I hate life if I was a roofing contractor and had to rely on this thing's performance. It's OK if you just use it for the occassional project. Home handyman? Yes! Contractor? Hell No!

After using many coil roofing nailers, I liked this one the best and decided to buy it. This nailgun works great and I would buy again!
