Subject: Re: Window with Black Background
Posted by Craig Markwardt on Thu, 15 Dec 2011 17:06:57 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Dec 15, 8:53 am, David Fanning <n...@dfanning.com> wrote:
> Folks,
>
> I was just fooling around here a minute ago and I accidentally > typed a Plot command. A graphics window with a black background > suddenly popped up in front me. It startled me. I haven't seen > a graphics window with a black background in a LONG time. I > forgot that this is what we used to do graphics in! :-)

And some of us still do, if we get lazy :-)

Subject: Re: Window with Black Background
Posted by penteado on Thu, 15 Dec 2011 17:29:34 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Dec 15, 11:53 am, David Fanning <n...@dfanning.com> wrote:
> Folks,
>
> I was just fooling around here a minute ago and I accidentally > typed a Plot command. A graphics window with a black background
> suddenly popped up in front me. It startled me. I haven't seen > a graphics window with a black background in a LONG time. I > forgot that this is what we used to do graphics in! :-)

Remember the red lines on black background? Common from the use of 0-255 color indexes when the device was expecting decomposed color assembled into a single number.

Subject: Re: Window with Black Background
Posted by Brian Wolven on Thu, 15 Dec 2011 21:08:13 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Wait... there are other colors? ;)