Hi all -

As some of you undoubtedly noticed, the FAQ site (and the rest of my domain) was down for the count over the weekend. It's back up again, but at a new location. I changed ISP's last week, and it was not smooth. The FTP site still needs some updates, so some things may only be available by HTTP a couple days.

Due to several reasons that noone else would care about, I'm self-hosting my WWW and FTP sites now. It wasn't my original intention to do it immediately, so I purchased too little bandwidth for my connection. I've already requested an upgrade, but don't know if it will happen in an hour or a week. In the meantime, downloads from the site will probably happen at a poky 6-8K/sec, but should be much faster when the upgrade is in place.

I'll put out another message when the upgrade is in place. In the meantime, those with fast connections or little patience may want to hold off on any visits. In fact, I'll use that as an excuse not to post the update to the FAQ. It's not that I haven't completed it or anything along those lines :-)

Regards,
